

Evaluation Manager

The Design Council helps Britain use design to build a stronger economy and improve everyday life. We help businesses become more successful, public services more efficient and designers more effective. We're funded by a combination of government grant and public and private sector partnerships and started life in 1944 as the Council of Industrial Design. Over more than 60 years Britain has seen massive social, economic and technological change. We've changed too.

Success matters to us, but measuring it matters just as much. Our programmes to embed design in business and the public sector are varied and unique, and we want to demonstrate where they're working and learn how to make them better. We also want to monitor our overall performance to ensure we are doing the best job we can. So we need an experienced expert to manage, guide and advise us on all things evaluation.

You'll be used to working on your own, or with everyone from Senior Directors to Coordinators. With a degree or qualification in market research or data analysis, you will be a strong communicator with good influencing skills and the ability to be an original thinker. Most of all, you will be confident assessing the value and impact of what we do.

If you are experienced in evaluation, able to develop arguments and challenge ideas, we'd like to hear from you.
